Overview

One of the most challenging facets of clinical nursing education is student evaluation. This class will provide important information about clinical teaching, learning, and assessment. Participants will leave with critical and creative teaching and assessment strategies and increased confidence in providing feedback and addressing the complexities of clinical evaluation.

Learning Objectives

Following this class, participants will be able to:

1. Identify the foundational value of clinical learning in nursing education.
2. Discuss traditional and creative strategies in clinical teaching and assessment.
3. Describe selected challenges associated with clinical assessment.
4. Analyze the application of clinical teaching and assessment strategies to personal nursing education practice.

Presenter

Dr. Judith Herrman is a nurse educator with a passion for adolescents, nursing education, and creative teaching strategies. Experiences in pediatric staff nursing, nursing management, and nursing education provide contexts for current practice as a nurse educator, nurse researcher, and national speaker. Judy is actively involved in research related to adolescent decision-making and sexuality, interpersonal violence prevention, and teaching strategies focusing on age-related learning. Her publications in numerous and diverse journals provide valuable data and results to varied audiences. Judy is currently involved in several youth advocacy initiatives and is on the board of the Healthy Teen Network. Authoring the books Creative Teaching Strategies for the Nurse Educator and Fast Facts on Adolescent Health for Nursing and Healthcare Providers has provided Judy with the opportunity to share strategies and information around the nation.
